“TASAVVUR, KHWAAB, DARWAZEY, DAREECHE”

Imagination, dreams, doors, windows,
Let someone come and see how many paths have been drawn.
Your problem will remain the memories,
You will remain scattered while living among people.
All the words are still in my mind,
If I speak, they will echo like twinkling stars.
We are alone, and alone we shall remain,
They will come, persuade us, and merely say a few things.
It is not a matter of speaking, yet everyone is unfaithful,
In the style of words lies the intoxication of separation.
Come, let us now watch this display of stars,
Holding them in such a way, holding the flowers of the garden.
Imagination, dreams, doors, windows,
Let someone come and see how many paths have been drawn...

“Uljhan”

Giving these eyes sleep only through struggle,
then sowing a garden of thoughts within the mind,
how, O Lord,
am I to pass the night of loneliness?
For not one, but thousands of scenes appear,
from the sight of the beloved onward,
they continuously gaze through the doorway of thoughts.
Those scenes that I had never even seen before,
those very scenes
keep wandering before my eyes.
This burning of the world,
this imagined world,
a world carrying sparks of fire within its eyes.
Then becoming exhausted like this,
a tear falling,
it does not suit me,
whether it is my own way or another's.

“Uljhan”

This instrument of confusion, this thought of confusion,
all my patterns
are shattered by confusion.

Then becoming entangled in confusions once again,
miraculous plans begin to sway,
this method of translation,
is this the purpose of nature?

This merciless intention of confusion,
through anxiety and grief,
it gives rise to my confusion.

These pearls of turmoil,
which wander humming with radiance,
they keep lulling my silence to sleep,
and they keep me,
from head to toe in the night,
until the brilliance of the sun, awake.

“DUNIYA”

In the faction of confinement,
I have seen this world through dreams.

Across glass windows and doors,
I have only seen this world.

Without a beginning, within the fragile standard of dreams,
I have seen this world as a secret falling apart.

In the crackling of lightning,
I have seen this world in the luminous voice of clouds.

Beneath the hazy veil of tear-filled eyes,
I have seen this world through shadows.

Let it be, let me see, let me speak,
For yes, I too have seen this world.
I have heard it, understood it, recognized it,

Now I have seen enough of this world.

Yes, I have seen this world on maps,
For it is merely round.

This world is of no use at all.

Is there even such a thing as a world?

My world...?

Where is the world...?

I have simply seen enough of this world.

“HIDAYAT”

With great weariness, I said with my tongue:

"O Allah, grant me guidance."

A message came in great abundance:

"O My servant, raise your gaze and look."

There, resting by the doors of your home,

placed in a lofty position,

behold a Book, dearer than all the worlds.

Open it and see.

I have sent My poetry within it.

What is knowledge?

Come closer to Al-Alim and see.

What is it that you wish to know?

It has already been presented before the wise.

What happened, and why did it happen?

Look at the truth.

What is happening, and why is it happening?

Throw yourself onto the righteous path.

What will happen, and why will it happen?

Look to My guidance.

“HIDAYAT”

Everything lies contained within a single Book before everyone's eyes.

Take some time and look into it in remembrance of Me.

If you find the time, let Me know.

I shall record it among your good deeds.

Otherwise, ask Me again.

For it is I alone who will grant guidance.

“KUCH ISS TARHA”

In this way, let me write you into books,
so that both the pages and the pen grow shy.

In this way, I wrote you upon the pages,
that every single word grew a little shy.

There were some letters that fought... until they spread themselves across this page.

There are some that began to burn... for had you chosen us, it would have been beauty beyond measure.

What can be said of these tiny particles of letters?
Not even a single particle of them is dependent upon you.
There is knowledge within them, and there is foolishness.

There is light within them, and there is darkness.

In this way, let me write you into books,
that in every word there may be a sense of belonging.

In this way, let me write you into books,
that you may become only mine.

What indeed is the human heart?

It becomes beautiful when you dwell within it.

In this way, let me hold that book against my chest,
that you may feel that I belong to you.

“KONSA KUCH BADAL JAIGA”

If you were to leave,
what gathering of letters
would ever be able to express my sorrow?
Even if I were to write you into a book once again,
what, after all, would really change?
The heart would become devoid of warmth,
the soul would lose its life.
Once again, the pen would rise...
Even if I were to express something... would my deprived destiny ever find the Straight Path?
Granted, time will teach me,
and no doubt, you will forget me, but...
will what we had still remain?
If you were to leave,
even the stars would fall from the sky.

“KONSA KUCH BADAL JAIGA”

Some people,
upon my crumbling fate,
would swear false promises and empty oaths.

My own stars
would come crashing down upon me.

Then there would once again be a silence that could be felt.

This honoured world
would pause for a moment.
And even if the pen were to rise again...

in the end,
what, after all,
would really change?

“KUCH RAHE YA NA RAHE”

The flowers have lost their colours, even the butterflies are upset.

Even the stars have turned to dust,
and once they burned, they became kohl made of ash.

No longer does that radiance remain in the stars,
nor is there that charm in the displays.

They fell in such a way that they emptied the entire sky.

Now even the rain brings no delight,
for where is the fragrance left in the soil anymore?

Whether anything remains or not,
even the memories have become estranged from the heart.

Now even imagination no longer captivates me.

Look...

what a remarkable decree it has become:

My beloved person became a stranger while remaining close.

Now all I feel is lifelessness,
for within me, against me,
everything has become estranged.

“KUCH RAHE YA NA RAHE”

Now that feeling is no longer there.

The heart has become voiceless.

So now...

whether anything remains or not...

my ability to feel

has come to an end.

“SHAYAD”

You did not arrive by knocking,
so I have no complaint if you leave just as quietly.

I left the windows open,
perhaps you would send a message through the winds.
I left the doors open as well, lest you hesitate to come.

Perhaps, someday, if your heart wished,
you would come to ask how I was.

You were fond of the moon.

I did not know
that you yourself would become the moon.
That light, those distances, that radiance...
I only wished to touch them for a moment.

I did not know
you would leave behind your own scars.
Even now, the windows remain open,
in the hope that perhaps someday
you will send a message with the winds.

Even then, I have no complaint.

If you come, you come... otherwise,
you will not.

“QISSA-E-BATIN”

I loved,
and I also became a rival.
I never complained,
and I became insignificant as well.
Through devotion to you, I was brought to ruin.
Those oppressions of yours became my possession.
The rust upon my heart became its songs.
Lost in you like a nightingale,
I found hundreds of excuses for union.
Becoming the guardian of your falsehood,
I became restless throughout the passing of time.
Then, through separation,
I attained reflection.
Among the wise,
I reached a station of recognition.
But what I truly attained was my Creator.
He made the dawn of truth miraculous.

“QISSA-E-BATIN”

I witnessed contradictions...

He made me successful

by first making me fail.

In your place,

I sought the pleasure of my Creator.

Through devotion to Him,

I became restored.

All the tyrannies within me were destroyed.

The rust upon my heart became radiant.

When I fell in love with Him,

I became His beloved,

and I acquired a rare refinement of character.

I became beloved...

I became joyful in nature.

Becoming the guardian of my own dignity,

I became accepted by the universe.

Carrying the companionship of the innermost secret,

I became prostration upon the highest heaven.

And then, I became an heir.

“EK AZEEZ”

May my beloved come,
so that we may speak with one another.
May we break down the guardians around his heart.

But how, O Lord, can we do ourselves such a great favor, that he may become the guardian of the pathways of my heart?

Then, may You be so pleased with our love, that You Yourself become our Protector.

So that, at the appointed time of death,
our funeral may rise free from punishment.
And upon our lips may there be the melody of,
"Allah is One." When this soul sets out for the realm of souls, may its interpretation be the silence of a tale.

May this alone be the measure of our existence.
Whenever You choose to test us through one another,
may there be hidden within it a reason that leads to success and benefit.

“EK AZEEZ”

Bless me

with just one beloved, so that everything else becomes merely an excuse to remain close.

May there be graceful beauty.

May there be guidance toward union.

May there be rare visions.

May there be songs of beautiful tears. May our character be beyond the limits of time. May our conscience find its dwelling place. May green meadows be our pillow. May there be a treasure of refinement. May there be the radiance of the moon. May there be a few moonlit gatherings.

Beneath the sky,
may there be worship of You,
and within it,
may there always be
Your remembrance.

“TADABBUR”

Do not speak enchanting words to yourself,
for peace resides only in truthfulness.

Even if you shed tears in solitude,
reality is adorned in the radiance of mirrors.

This oppressed contemplation of yours lays bare the innermost nature of worlds.

Those gazes of yours,
which wander in the delicate craftsmanship of the veiled,
if they were to behold the Light,
they would go about lighting the lamp of longing.

In the embrace of the son of desire,
they carry courage.

They carry the Book of their guidance. They remain veiled, only now they rise beneath a veil; otherwise,
in the corner of solitude, they wandered carrying a veil.

You who keep instruments for the sake of your songs,
do you also keep a voice for the Truth?

For the adornment of this world, you keep within your heart the turmoil of a storm, but do you also carry,
for the Hereafter, faith from head to toe?

“HASIL-E-TADABBUR”

We recite the chapters of self-praise.

We change our faces,

we change our manners.

Keeping our own contemplation concealed,

we place our faith in the Sufi and the Mullah.

We place our hopes

in the caravans of radiant stars, and upon the earth,

we exalt them

to a miraculous rank touched by the spark of divinity.

Then we become disappointed with the burning of life.

A pillow of cold winds,

a bed of green meadows beneath the head.

Bow your head

before

"Allah is One."

“HASIL-E-TADABBUR”

He loves praise. Offer your glorification within His protection. These songs of arguments, and all those excuses of yours.

Knowledge and understanding are yours as well,
O lover of my Prophet.

Then why do you search for Him when the sun already resides within your inner self?

Amid anxiety and sorrow,

He is like the crescent moon of Eid. Then why is your speech a profession of cruelty? Why do you keep creating division, having separated yourself

through the highest decree of destiny?

Now beauty has changed.

The manner has changed.

Once I attained my own contemplation,

all the hidden secrets

were unveiled.

“NIZAM”

The brilliance of the sun spread its burning light, yet the moon, though present, hid itself.

The radiance of the stars grew weary, and feelings laid bare across the heavens. The trees kept spreading the solitude of their shadows. The nightingale kept singing the melodies of its instrument.

The hawk adorned itself with the song of the discerning eye.

The buds were carved within the garden.

The enchanter left behind the knowledge of enchantment. The delight of certainty became separated from human nature.

Pride abandoned God and circled around the self instead.

In solitude, it became accustomed to sins.

Yet in public gatherings, its speech still sounded like that of a Muslim. When asked to act, it offered nothing but comforting excuses.

Having displeased the Lord, it found comfort in material wealth.

“NIZAM”

Now the birds have begun to return.

Their flight has finally come to the peace of rest.

It is the time of decline,
but what is that to you?

Evening has fallen,
but what is that to you?

You were asleep.
What concern had you for the order of things?

You were content with mockery.

By chance,
you awoke as well.

But now,
where is the time?

The order belongs to everyone,
yet...

what is it to us?

“RUSWAI-E-AKHIRAT”

Your life is one of display,
The blessings of the traditions
Reduced to mere adornment.
You take pride in dazzling luxuries,
While reality scatters upon the wind.

Open your eyes.

This whole existence
Is but an enchantment.
The appointed hour of death

Draws ever near.

You wander,
Lost among the sparks
Of worldly beauty.

Living examples
Have become reflections
Of those enchanted by the world.

“RUSWAI-E-AKHIRAT”

Your heart

Is filled with corrupt intent.

Amid countless illuminated lamps,

How can concern for the community remain

When your own Hereafter

Stands in disgrace?

The pursuit of the self endures As long as truth

Lies hidden beneath comfort And complacency.

The West has become your presence; Within your homeland

You have grown familiar With the triumphant uproars

Of worldly intoxication. Where shall gardens be found

If the Paradise of imagination Exists only

In the cultivation of division?

Then keep that imagined Paradise Within your own mind,

For your Hereafter,

Even now,

Remains ashamed of you.

“TASHAFFI”

What a trial this life is,
What a symphony of pain and longing it is.

At times, by taking away blessings,
It tests the patience of the heart.

At times, by granting blessings,
It tests the desires of the soul.

Be pleased with me, O Lord.

Neither this world is mine,
Nor the heavens are mine.

Yet this is the path:

Amid every storm,

There flows a pure spring.

Neither the interpretations are mine,
Nor the vision of the Beloved is mine.

Only their speeches remain,
Only their merciless passions remain.

“TASHAFFI”

These affections, these promises,

These comforting excuses,

This solitude,

These unsettling changes...

How, O Lord,

May I ever find silence?

This healing walks upon the wave of decline.

This healing safeguards hidden secrets.

This healing is the adornment of the world,

The very heart of nature's burning lamp.

This healing

Is the current that carries every longing.

What a trial this life is,

What a symphony of pain and longing it is.

“SIRATAL MUSALMANI”

Walk with the worthy,
Not merely with the crowds.
They may be flawed,
Yet they are at least not hypocrites.
You are the noblest of creation,
So have some regard for your own soul.
In these gatherings of people,
Only the embellishment of backbiting remains.
Their wisdom
Lives only in eloquent words.
Better than all of this
Is the corner of solitude.
Even if it is a life of seclusion and reflection,
The remembrance of Allah guides
Through the emptiest nights.
In that remembrance,
Even the shedding of tears
Becomes an act of witnessing.

“SIRATAL MUSALMANI”

"My remembrance is in the heavens."

"Remember Me, and I shall remember you."

What guidance truly lies

Within your gatherings?

If any remains,

It is only the guidance of sacrifice.

Then why should I abandon

The lessons of my own illumination?

Your celebrations

Last only a few fleeting moments.

And why should I dedicate

My soul to the display of this world,

When the Hereafter, too,

Is the soul's eternal home,

Waiting for my arrival?

This inhuman way

Among humankind...

Such is the world. Show me then...

I too shall walk your path, But tell me,

How is this road of yours

The Straight Path of a Muslim?

““QISSA-E-PAYMAN-E-AWWALIN ” ”

All the stories have been forgotten
Beneath the heavens.
Some are lost in indulgence,
Some in comfort,
Others weep in worship.
One nation, one faith,
Yet countless versions of belief.
To one portion was granted dominion.
Ambitions were built,
And towering monuments were raised.
A melody rose amid the turmoil,
Until everyone poured
The fiery cup
Into their very eyes.
The highest flights of imagination
Were adorned
With the sparks of deceit.
Even the people of language,
Though not without feeling,

““QISSA-E-PAYMAN-E-AWWALIN ” ”

Allowed the instrument of song

To fall into discord.

Even when awakened eyes

Began to see,

Their vision proved

Of little worth.

Human nature,

Through endless change,

Carved humanity itself

Into divided fragments.

It fashioned its own interpretations,

And clothed its sins

In garments of its own making.

The Story of the First Covenant

Was forgotten.

Do you remember?

Even Adam

Was sent forth

From Paradise.

“Ayyash-e-Zindagi”

What is there, after all, in a life of indulgence?

Every pleasure is but an instrument

To conceal the pain of living.

Such is the course of nature,

For where does true peace

Ever dwell in this world?

All those once called my own

Have turned away.

What concern remains with strangers?

Even strangers remain strangers,

And among one's own,

Where is the feeling of belonging?

So I wove for myself

A realm of the unseen.

Beyond sorrow and Allah,

I possess nothing.

If I enter the gatherings of people,

There is loneliness.

If I sit among their tales and pleasures,

There is loneliness.

“Ayyash-e-Zindagi”

Even their Western civilization
Whispers nothing but loneliness.

Once I resented the very word,
"Loneliness."

Until I found self-sufficiency
Within that same solitude.

There,
Every worldly splendor came to an end.

Even if I happen to step outside,
The familiar destination
Is still the corner of solitude.

Now even loneliness
No longer grieves me.

Nor does grief itself.
The solitude of seclusion
Is silence itself.

The heart of my existence
Has dissolved.

My heart alone
Safeguards its hidden secrets;

“Ayyash-e-Zindagi”

It is the keeper Of its own mysteries.

Even speech grows shy Before becoming words.

It is built instead Within silence.

How will they ever hear it Amid their own songs?

Their instruments are enough To disturb the noise of existence. How, then, Will my voice ever be heard?

Even if one's vision were sharp,

What blessing would it truly behold? What hidden reality

Would finally become clear?

It is not something that ought to be spoken, Yet I shall say it anyway. I have endured so much in silence;

I can endure A little more.

But what is there, after all,

In a life of indulgence, When all of it

Is only a fleeting deception

Of a few passing moments? And in the end...

Where is the preparation

For the Hereafter?

“Ek Awaz”

Some of your people died,

And some of ours.

Your grief was sold in politics,

While ours flowed away

Along the riverbanks.

The pain was ours.

The river of blood was ours.

The barren land it left behind

Was ours.

We were only on our way to learn,

When someone tore the stars apart

And left devastation across the sky.

To save ourselves,

We were forced

To let go of the hands

Of our own.

The innocent became dust,

Dissolving into the wind.

Do you hold no regard

For humanity?

“Ek Awaz”

Does your creed
Contain no words
Of the Hereafter?

Why does your heart
Carry no compassion for us?

Why, among humankind,
Are you no longer human?
By killing one like yourself,

You believe
You have achieved greatness.

Knowledge was meant

To protect,

Yet you turned

The light of knowledge

Into punishment.

Having attained power and lofty heights,

You turned them

Into chaos.

We were left

“Ek Awaz”

Burned by that blazing fire,

And countless others,

Like us,

Were disgraced.

Yet everyone remains silent.

Their lips are locked,

Rusted over,

Still singing

The songs of falsehood.

If only true knowledge

Had been built within you.

Then perhaps

The very cloth of your shroud

Would have been stitched

With this truth.

If only this tragedy

Had fallen upon them,

Perhaps someone else

Would have spoken.

“Ek Awaz”

Someone would have declared

Your downfall.

Someone would have spoken

Against the satanic order.

Someone fearless,

Like me.

They would have spoken the truth.

They would have spoken

Of the unseen.

They would have spoken

Without measure.

Now make the calculation

For which you once believed

You had accounted.

Now extinguish

That blazing fire

Which you yourself

Set alight.

” Kya Karz hai”

What debt do I owe

To those I do not even know?

What obligations rest upon me

For deeds that were never mine alone?

What affliction lies within these wounds

That were never caused by me?

Those imaginations,

Those restless thoughts,

Do not allow

The poverty of my hidden soul

To sleep.

From the very beginning,

A covenant keeps returning:

"Why has this darkness of decline spread?"

"Why has your consciousness become so barren?"

Their questions

Reach the perfection of the heavens,

While my answers

Remain without meaning.

” Kya Karz hai”

What secret could I tell Him

Who is Al-Alim,

The All-Knowing?

What wisdom could I present before Him

Who is the Divine Himself?

Then comes the lightning across the skies,

Then the world of rain,

Then the earth turns green once more,

And the fearless solitude of the trees returns.

What debt do I owe

Even to these winds?

What duty rests upon me

Toward this knowledge?

What affliction lies

Within this civilization of bewilderment?

"Kya-Kya Karna Par Sakta Hai"

Sometimes, one must remain silent.

One must learn to endure

The wounds carved into the heart.

Neither do they understand spoken words,

Nor those that are written.

At times,

Silence itself

Must become the language.

When someone asks,

"How are you?"

One may have to smile and simply say,

"I'm fine."

They will never see,

Nor will we be able to show them.

Such is the sorrowful rhythm of this world.

Such is the passage of life.

Here,

Even after dying within,

One may still have to live.

"Kya-Kya Karna Par Sakta Hai"

People come and go
With the changing winds.

Here,
Even to those dearest to us,
One may have to say,
"May Allah protect you."

Everyone follows
Their own order.

Everyone belongs
To their own society.

Sometimes,
Forgetting who you truly are,
You may have to wear
The customs of others.

This world is such
That in the name of love,
It leads people toward idolatry.

"Kya-Kya Karna Par Sakta Hai"

Here,

In the beloved's name,

One may even find themselves

Draping ceremonial cloths in devotion.

This is the marketplace

Of performers and pretenses.

It makes people forget

The Hereafter. Here, One must keep burying desires

To awaken true awareness.

You think Life is easy. Try awakening The desire to truly live,

And see How much you may have to lose.

Your soul is not Like Ibrahim's, That such a sacrifice

Should be demanded of you.

Yet upon this path, You may still have to sacrifice

Your own ego. Pray that Allah Himself

Becomes the One who purchases you.

For here, Even souls

May have a price. Sometimes, one must remain silent.

Sometimes, one must endure

The wounds carried within the heart.

“BANDA-E-MUMIN”

Songs are not born
Only to fade away.
Nor are books opened
Merely to be closed again.
You were not created
Simply to die.
Awaken within yourself
The consciousness of reflection.
Death is the inevitable law of nature.
Every soul belongs to the Ummah,
Whether servant or master.
You, too, are a believing servant,
Yet the community lies asleep.
Otherwise, why is no voice raised
When every part of the body is wounded?
This wealth,
This worldly fortune,
Belongs to an age
Of ignorant self-glorification.

“BANDA-E-MUMIN”

We did not come
To witness the empty spectacles of this world,
Only to abandon The journey of life.
What place is yours Among the Lions of Allah?
What rank, What honour Do you truly possess?
By name, Everyone is a believing servant.
But do you truly understand The weight of that title?
What will you do, When you yourself Remain troubled
By the suffering of your own life?
You are indeed A believing servant,
But are you aware of it?
Even if you possess Knowledge of the world,
Do you understand The beginning of this age?
You have entered The family of humankind,
But do you possess
The courage and resolve
To endure the trial
Of prejudice
For the sake of the Fountain of Paradise?

“ZULM-E-ZAAT”

If something cannot protect a daughter,
Erase the darkness of that very nature.
Whoever has no concern for another's shelter,
Nor any regard for her dignity and honor,
Who neither cares nor reflects,
Though present, remains absent from the essence of life.
How can I describe
The language of this condition,
When nothing of the self
Remains within the self?
No sense of respect remains,
No grace in speech.
How much more can your story
Be spoken through traditions?
Now neither the desire for words remains,
Nor the comfort they once brought.
Neither you remain,
Nor your hollow songs.

“ZULM-E-ZAAT”

The West has become your presence;

Your words echo its influence.

You scattered so much destruction

That you scarred the very breast of creation.

False melodies still linger

In gatherings dressed as faith.

With lowered eyes

People walk the streets,

While the truth stands exposed

Outside the halls of celebration.

Reach the highest peaks if you must,

Yet you will never attain

The way of true understanding.

In the end,

The Hereafter

Will render the account

With perfect truth.

Until then,

If something cannot protect a daughter,

Erase the darkness

Of that very nature.

“JURRAT”

Wrong are we,
And wrong, too, are our words.

So you say.

Uncivilized are we,
While it is our lives
You claim are the threat.

You call yourselves
Saints and righteous souls,
Your garments unstained.

Surely it is not you
Who disturb
The peace of the world.

The game is yours,
For we are cast as the ignorant.

These are your principles,
And this is your justice.
Your fabricated stories,

“JURRAT”

Where we are made the criminals,

And even the guilt

Is declared to be ours.

Then you accuse us,

Only to make us carry

The shame as well.

We have become familiar

With everyone's indifference,

And with the songs

That forever rest upon their lips.

Knowing everything,

We are expected

To pretend ignorance.

Yet even now,

You continue to say

That we are wrong,

And that even the way we speak

Is wrong.

“ AMANAT-E-ROOH “

"THE TRUST OF THE SOUL"

You gave me this delicate heart.

You gave me the beauty of dawn.

Into my destiny,

You placed both flaw and the unseen.

Within my sighs,

You placed abundance.

Within the mystery of faith,

Amid the sorrow of life,

You filled the depths of my heart

With the burdens of this world.

You granted me

A mind that reflects,

A soul that delights

In noble character.

Yet into my destiny

You wrote oppression.

Meeting You

Is my destiny.

“ AMANAT-E-ROOH “

This is my only longing.

Grant me Your light.

Grant me guidance.

Now, carrying this courage of truth,

O Lord,

Where am I to go?

Carrying this longing for peace,

Lest I be lost

Among the crowds.

Their tongues are sharp.

Cruelty has become their way.

You have blessed me with wisdom,

But how am I to make them understand?

O Lord,

Where shall I go

With this knowledge

And this understanding?

“ AMANAT-E-ROOH “

If I seek
A world of color and fragrance,
The gatherings of existence
Have become foreign.
Their ways are strange,
Their path
One of decline.
Their hearts
Know little mercy.
"Say: I seek refuge in the Lord of daybreak."
O Lord,
Grant me refuge.
"From the evil of what He has created."
Otherwise,
Where shall I flee
From this evil?
I am among the noblest of Your creation.
Tell me,
Among hearts so small,
Where am I to belong?

“BAZM-E-ARBAAB-E-JUNOON”

Casting aside the veil of modesty,
They carry boldness in their eyes.

Clothed in gilded civilization,
They imagine themselves
To be heaven-bound.

To conceal
The poverty of their evenings,
They drape themselves
In the miraculous glow of twilight.

To hide
Their own sins,
They recite praises
Of worldly wealth.

These are the performers
Of today's hidden dramas,
Yet nothing shall remain concealed
On the Day of Tomorrow.

They mistake
Their speeches and narrations
For absolute truth.

“BAZM-E-ARBAAB-E-JUNOON”

From a single verse,
They produce
A thousand beginnings
And endings.
Fashioning interpretations
Of their own,
They preserve
Only the secrets
They wish to keep.
Awake through
The solitude of the night,
They bury within their hearts
The turmoil
Of the day.
This is the gathering
Of the masters of delusion,
A spectacle
Of worldly brilliance.

“BAZM-E-ARBAAB-E-JUNOON”

They are prisoners Of imagination,
Captives Of idolizing their own desires.
They weave illusions As fragile as glass,
Until reason itself Is shattered
By perfected arguments.

Where will true fellowship remain,
When people concern themselves
Only with securing Their own homes?
Where will the unity Of the Ummah remain,
When each follows
A different god Of their own making?
What value is there
In sleeping,
When the true delight
Lies in awakening?
What value is there
In merely seeing You,
If attaining Your pleasure
Is something we are willing to lose?

“AADAKAAR-E-MARHALA”

The world's great tragedy,
And these chance-made words.
The covenant of the Realm of Souls,
Set against this atmosphere
Of sorrow and burden.
A jewel upon Your crown,
While the eagle,
Knowing its own majesty,
Scatters what remains.
This pull of darkness,
This creation of decline.
They have grown accustomed
To gatherings,
Though their characters
Have already fallen.
Amid the hypocrisy
Of the pretenders,
My mind seeks refuge
In imagination.

“AADAKAAR-E-MARHALA”

My awareness belongs
To the placeless realm
Of hidden mysteries.

O Lord,
Grant me refuge,
Lest the very foundation
Of my being
Be destroyed.

There is that unity of humankind,
Yet they continue
To fracture
The community
Honored by the Ascension.

And still,
Their gatherings Welcome them With celebration.

The poems have been written.
The strings have been tuned. Now let someone,
With a heart broken enough to weep,
Sing them aloud. For in the end, Everyone here
Is merely an actor Passing through
A single stage of life.

“RUSWAI -E- BAATIN”

Do not separate one human being from another.

They all recite the Qur'an,

Yet interpret it through the lens of sects.

Belonging to the same faith,

They wage wars

For the sake of the self.

They alter the same religion,

Then fear True knowledge And understanding.

With these actions, These desires, This heart, This body,

This condition, This way of living,

They circle around human beings

In the name of love,

As though they were worthy of devotion.

This outward display

Conceals within

The stories Of an impoverished soul.

Claiming certainty, They enter gatherings,

Only to perish In the noise

Of their own speeches. In the name

Of noble character,

“RUSWAI -E- BAATIN”

They adorn themselves Merely
For the approval Of the crowd.
How will they teach others,
When they have never learned To discipline
Their own selves? When one is separated
Even from oneself, What remains
Between one human And another?
All have become estranged From the fire
Within their own souls.
Caught in the bloodstained grip
Of a fallen civilization, They mistake
The fading glow of twilight For the light
Of a living heart. The very fields They praise
As signs of prosperity Become The cause
Of their own decline. They treat the Hereafter
As a hidden mystery, Yet regard
Their own true selves As strangers.

“RUSWAI -E- BAATIN”

When Tomorrow comes,
They imagine themselves
Among the purified,
Though the sweetness
Of true nearness
Will no longer remain.
The very Ummah
Whose sins
They decorate
With gilded appearances,
Is the same Ummah
Whose prophetic message
They diminish
And hold in contempt.

"RUSWAAI-E-PAIGHAMBAR"

It was never only
The Prophet's covenant,
Nor merely
The marriages of four.
Yet they sing of these alone,
As though they were
The whole of faith
And the measure of honor.
When was the last time
They offered
The prayer
At its earliest hour?
Or opened
The unveiled Book
Of Guidance?
From every string,
The same song is played.
They drape cloths
Upon graves and shrines.

"RUSWAAI-E-PAIGHAMBAR"

What help can be found,
When devotion
Has become
The worship of the dead?
This marketplace
Thrives
On the trade
Of countless false gods.
If wishes are granted
Only through supplication
To others,
Then why not
Offer four prostrations,
Instead of speaking
Only of four marriages?
True silence
Is the prostration
Before Divine Beauty.

"RUSWAAI-E-PAIGHAMBAR"

Not noise. For in the end,
Silence itself Will accomplish
What clamor never could. Not wealth, But sincere prayer,
Will make its declaration. Why is there No fear,
No trembling, When every created thing Will bear witness?
On the Day of the Hereafter, When every soul cries,
"Myself... myself..." One Messenger
Will stand, Bearing the burden
Of his people. Such is the love
Of the Prophet,
That he never abandoned
Concern For his Ummah.
He will continue to cry,
"My Ummah... My Ummah..."
With tears flowing. Such was the love
Of the Messenger, That he never abandoned
The innate purity Of the soul.
Then remember The One
Who never abandoned
His faithfulness
To us.
